Why Is $59 Billion Missing From HUD?

Cuomo Leaves HUD in Shambles

High-Risk Finance at the Federal Level

By Kelly Patricia O Meara of Insight (8-21-2003)

The introduction to the General Accounting Office (GAO) "high-risk" list of federal agencies engaged in dubious accounting practices

Treasury Checks And Unbalances; The federal government, for the seventh consecutive year, was unable to balance its books largely due to rampant financial chaos at the Defense Department

Byline: Kelly Patricia O'Meara, INSIGHT

It's that time of year again when Congress and the rest of us get the opportunity to pore over the government's financial statements and decide how well federal bureaucrats spent, and accounted for, the taxpayer dollars with which they were entrusted. The good news is that most of the federal agencies and departments are making progress. The bad news is that the federal government still cannot balance its checkbook.

the American people how, where and why their hard-earned tax dollars were spent during the previous year. The audits are a barometer that tells Congress whether a particular agency or department is fiscally responsible and whether it should be entrusted with additional funds.

Huge sums unaccounted for is like a hole in the milk bucket. This is:

- draining the resources right out of our neighborhoods;
- contributing to our budget cuts and deficits, along with increased debt;
- directly diminishing our family resources such as earning power, savings, retirement security, and quality education and healthcare.

What does this mean?

Discrepancies in America's accounts hide a black hole

By Daniel Gros

The global financial system seems to have a black hole at its centre. Over the last two decades, US residents have sold a total of about $5,500bn worth of IOUs to foreigners, yet the officially recorded net investment position of the US has deteriorated only by a little more than half of this amount ($2,800bn). The US capital market seems to have acted like a black hole for investors from the rest of world in which $2,700bn vanished from sight - or at least from the official statistics.

How can $2,700bn disappear?
